Writing Workshop:

Story, not Study:
A workshop to improve your research writing

Do research manuscripts have to be dry, abstract, elaborate and jargon-filled? Definitely, not! But they sure tend to be. In this writing workshop you will learn two new strategies – Problem/Gap/Hook and Mapping the Gap – to help you write stronger, more compelling manuscript Introductions. We will also work through two grammar pearls: Sentence Craft and Paragraphing. These grammar refreshers will improve the clarity and coherence of your own writing, and enhance your ability to give effective, actionable feedback on others’ manuscripts. The workshop will combine brief didactics with application exercises, small group interaction and individual writing time with just-in-time coaching. Please come with a draft of an introduction to work on during the day.

Keynote Presentation:

Story, not Study:
How to write manuscripts that readers can’t put down!

This presentation aims to inspire you to write not only to be published, but also to be read – and, most importantly, to be remembered. It will challenge the conventions that make academic writing soggy and turgid; share 5 tips for writing more engaging manuscripts; reflect on insights from famous writers; and encourage you to set new intentions for the kind of research writing you want to be known for.
