

Making The Links: Certificate in Global Health

Call for applications for the Fall 2023 is currently closed

Making the Links: Certificate in Global Health is a 2-year course open to students in the College of Medicine and School of Rehabilitation Science. Making the Links offers a holistic education for participants that is grounded in anti-racism, anti-oppression, intersectionality, interprofessional & interdisciplinary collaboration, and community engagement. The content of the program focuses on health equity, social accountability & advocacy, global citizenship, that are required to meet the needs of populations which have been historically marginalized by oppressive policies. Including the structural drivers of health inequity and the impacts on lived experience of people.

Through two foundational courses and three structured practicum placements which are rooted in reflection and self-positioning, students develop their skills in the following key areas:

Community engagement and advocacy, and cultural competence skills

Social and structural determinants of health

Social location awareness/bias

Collaborate in interdisciplinary approaches that address intersectionality

Critical integration skills: apply theory to practice

Global governance for health

Political economy of health

Components of the course:

CHEP 402: Global Health I

CHEP 410: Inner City Practicum

CHEP 411: Rural/Indigenous Community Practicum

CHEP 403: Global Health II

CHEP 415: International Practicum

Visit our website for more information: <https://medicine.usask.ca/social-accountability/training/mtl.php>

Contact: carlyn.seguin@usask.ca